Being Jana Frank

Once again in the middle of the night, Jana Frank has to bail out her daughter Marie and her father-in-law from a Frankfurt police station. The two guerrilla gardeners had illegally attempted to plant flowers and shrubs in the concrete chasms of the banking metropolis when they were caught. Jana, a single mother and a deployment planner for an airline has had enough of events like this. She can't expect any assistance from her former husband Robert, who lives in London, either. She decides to throw her green-tinted pension revolutionary, Charly, out of her apartment.

More out of defiance than excitement, he immediately purchases a run-down farmyard in the Spessart region via an Internet auction. Because she believes that he has been bamboozled she decides to talk to the owner of the house. When she lays her eyes on Thomas Lorenz, she can do nothing but swoon …
